ONLINE: The Project Coordinator for BTOP Express Mary Zangerle, left, and Lockport Library Director Marie Bindeman unveil the new portable tab and laptop computers that will be available at the library. Lockport Public Library recently received federal funding for its new "Knowledge, Employment and You" project, which enabled the library to establish a new public computing center. The center expands community access to the Internet, computer technology, e-resources and workforce instructions.

ACCESS: Lewiston Public Library Director Jill Palermo, left, and Lockport librarian Abigail Schuler explore one of the new laptop computers available at the Lockport Public Library. The project provided 12 new laptops with add-ons, such as webcams and handicap-assistive devices. Through the program, the library has also been able to offer a number of free computer and workforce training classes.
