Libraries offer internet access, welcoming spaces, convenient hours and locations, and most importantly librarians to serve as information navigators.

The Partnership

The U.S. Department of Labor, Employment and Training Administration (ETA) and the Institute of Museum and Library Services (IMLS) are working together to highlight effective practices and encourage additional collaboration between the workforce investment system and public libraries.

30 Million Americans used a library to help address career and employment needs in the last 12 months according to estimates in a University of Washington study released March, 2010 and sponsored by the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation and IMLS.

These job seekers reported using the library to submit on-line applications (68%), search for employment opportunities (76%), and work on their résumés (46%). Many of them visit their library on a regular basis. Three-quarters of these people reported using the library at least once a week.

Working together, libraries and the public workforce system can make it easier for job seekers to get employment and training services that can lead to better jobs, career pathways, and sustainable wages.

NATIONAL ON-LINE TOOLS

As part of its commitment to helping libraries serve the needs of job seekers, the Institute of Museum and Library Services provided a grant to WebJunction and the State Library of North Carolina to develop and deliver training for libraries nationwide.

WebJunction is a learning community working to ensure all library staff have the resources and support they need to power relevant, vibrant libraries. Since 2003, WebJunction has helped more than 50,000 library staff build the job skills they need to meet the challenges of today's libraries.
